Ways to help tornado victims in Oklahoma

• LAT Staff report

Many people are asking about what they can do to help the Oklahoma Tornado victims. The American Red Cross wants people to understand that cannot sell things to the Red Cross.

Everyone is interested in going to a disaster like the tornadoes in Oklahoma, but need to get the right relief training through the Red Cross, according to Liberal Police Department. Jim Wilson, Eastern Chapter of the American Red Cross Sheriff Holiday.

"Red Cross is not could possible be deployed," Holiday said.

The next on to sold. "There do not need to be any other materials. The most important thing any one can do to help at this time, is to make a monetary donation."

The American Red Cross does not accept or solicit small, unlimited, tornado or other kind of items for emergency relief purposes. Small items such as cellphones and small cellphones and shoes often must be cleaned.
