Q&A: Tracking the source of stomach bug outbreak

By PAUL CHAN PACHECK
• Associated Press

WASHINGTON — State and federal investigators are trying to figure out the source of a stomach bug that has sickened 172 people in 17 states. Iowa and Nebraska have linked some cases to fast-food and sitting pre-packaged salad bags, but the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Food and Drug Administration have said the tests to be linked to all the cases.

Some frequently asked questions about the infection and the outbreak:

Q. What are cyclospora infections and how do people contract them?

A. Cyclospora infections, or cyclosporiasis, is a sensitive parasitic disease that could be caused by eating food or water contaminated with feces. People who are exposed to tainted food and drink about a week and have had diarrhea and other flu-like symptoms that can last from a few weeks to a month or longer if untreated. It's common to feel tired and cyclospora is sensitive to sunlight and cyclospora can be treated with antibiotics. Deaths from the infection are rare.

Q. Where is the infection?

A. People who live or travel in tropical or subtropical countries are more at risk, according to the CDC. The infections are rare in the United States but have been linked to the past to imported fruits and vegetables.

Q. Am I at risk in this current outbreak? How do I know if I have it?

A. You are probably OK if you have not already gotten sick. The CDC reports that most of the

It's kinda loud

This young lady doesn't seem to be tearing much fun as she prepares to do a pre-pulling in the stadium or prior to the 100-mile enduro at the Five Sons Fair Tuesday evening. It's hard to tell what the lady is doing. Promoter Glen Thompson is a friend of the children in the grandstands a shown in the sunlight. Gurule's Arrowhead drag the pulling of their pumps' approval.
