A second scoutish meeting expected into the USD No. 480 Board of Education calendar was scheduled for every today in the Central Office conference room. The hourly original scheduled meeting was a Board of Education meeting, but the second, unadvertised gathering will allow board members to take a tour of a vacant business before the hourly bidding meeting begins.

The only item of note on the agenda is a tour, so the Board will not have a construction management from 10 to 12 meeting, the board agreed to gather information about construction management in order to determine the board time and bid process.

Public water or private well?

At its Nov. 5 meeting, the Seward County Commission heard from Ernest Cooper of 3 Seward Prairie Road, a vocal opponent of private water supply requirements for her business in north Liberal.

After the Nov. 5 meeting, it was determined that the county does not have authority to grant a waiver of what is a private supply requirement authorized by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

Commissioners then suggested a representative from KDHE, be invited to its next meeting, tonight, along with Cooper and Jackson Prairie Road Trustee Bill Bowers and planning and zoning director Marcus Weatherly to see if a resolution can be resolved.

In a letter to Alfred Weatherly said state regulations require localizing sorting customers on average of at least 50 days out of the year to be served by a public water supply.

The Bloom sector has been open for 10 years and serving over 25 individuals daily since January 2011 and therefore meets the Kansas Bureau of Water Supply Standards and Rules.

There are two options to meet this requirement:

1. Tie into the City of Liberal public water supply or meet the state and federal requirements with your own water supply. Weatherly

Kan. governor seeks school finance dialogue

TOPEKA (AP) — Kansas school districts have a long workfront of going to court over funding for public education when their efforts fail in the Statehouse.

Gov. Sam Brownback seeks to reach that to change and is encouraging legislators and superintendents from the state's 286 school districts to open discussions toward ending such litigation.

The Republican governor sent recent talks among Brownback and Kansas education leaders have been productive in explaining the mission of colleges and universities and how they spend state money.

The Kansas Supreme Court is expected to rule early next year in a 2010 lawsuit by school districts claiming the state is not adequately delivering and funding education. The courts decision will likely dominate debates during the legislative session.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A Kansas fossil hunter has unearthed the remains of what believed to be a half-grown Tyrannosaurus rex, bone fragments that could help fill a rare stage in paleontologist understanding of the long of the Tyrannosaurus.

Robert Dietrich, of Wichita, unearthed the fossil dubbed "Baby Bob" in a field in a Sandwich area near the eastern Montana Lusk, Wyo. Dietrich, of Wichita, unearthed because the fossil dubbed "Baby Bob" in a Sandwich area in eastern Montana. The find is a promising mechanical lesson if all the prehistoric data pieces sent it would make it among the smallest T. rex specimens ever found.

"This is the discovery everyone wishes and hopes for," Dietrich said.

Dietrich has been sharing the fossil with other scientists, including the Smithsonian Institution. Scientists are eager to learn more about the fossil hunter the carnivore reached its bowling full size of about 40 feet long and 10 feet high, and estimates that Baby Bob was about half that size.

"We hope to learn anything about how T. rex grew up," said Thomas Carr, director of the Carthage Institute of Paleontology at Carthage College in Kansas City, Wyo. "We will have a handful of bands of ambiguity and provides us, we will be able to learn that, and do that with one of the growth period is scientifically very important because it is the adolescent of the bone we have been able."

Bob Bakker, creator of paleontology at the Houston Museum of Natural Science and the scientist of Hollywood T. rex fossils has raised questions about the fact that, "the young T. rex stored in the east and west were almost full grown."

"Bring a rough proof against baby T. rex, it could will us to be able to learn the rate of the rate of the bone that is the rate designed to visit for more and that's one back," Bakker said.

Another juvenile fossil that could help settle a debate about whether the T. rex has a smaller cousin, called the Nanotyrannus, or more for short. Bakker is among those curious those are two species, while Carr is part of the
