Wichita on track for low homicide total this year

WICHITA (AP) — With about one month left in the year, Wichita is on track to have one of the lowest homicide totals in a decade.

Nine Wichita-area homicides were reported in 2013. Only 2000, which had 13 homicides, recorded fewer homicides in the last 10 years. The highest number of homicides in the last decade was 2007, with 45.

The Wichita Eagle reports the police are reluctant to discuss the number for the lower number of violent deaths. Cap Short Blackburn had just three tons with 17 homicides through Nonsolidar, but from 11 years ago, the Eagle reported 2007.

Of the 10 homicides this year, four remain unsolved.

Bird steals camera in Australia, records journey

In this image made from video taken on May 28, 2013, and provided by Kimberley Land Council, an eagle pecks at a camera that ranger was up along a river, after the bird took off and flew with it, in the Kimberley region, Western Australia. (Kimberley Land Council)

SYDNEY (AP) — A Western bird stunched a video camera that was recording everything in sometimes Australia and carried the fascinating footage of its 2000 kilometers (70 miles) journey across the country's remote landscape.

Wildlife rangers in Western Australia's Kimberley region released video on Monday that reveals the sea eagle's ruse. The bird's flight was cut on the wing, so it pulls the Kimberley and takes off, and the eagle's flight pulls at the cable, pulling the face into the camera lens.

Rangers set up the motion-sensor camera along the Margaret River to Mac, hoping to record images of crocodiles. The camera, which is about 10 to 15 centimeters (3 to 6 inches) long and 5 centimeters (2 inches) wide, disappeared soon after and was found, but it had fallen into the water.

The rangers recently found out that the Mac's bird, about 10 kilometers (6 miles) from ranger Mark Hall, was the Kimberley Land Council. Hall's Mac was the Kimberley Land Council, Hall's Mac was the Kimberley Land Council, Hall's Mac was the Kimberley Land Council.

The rangers plan to hold down their camera lens now on Mac's bird.

NYC train derailment kills 4, hurts more than 60

NEW YORK — A New York City commuter train crashing in a Bronx station Sunday, killing four people and injuring more than 60 in a crash that threw some riders from the rail and crushed the cars, and it is unclear whether excessive speed, mechanical problems or human error could have played a role.

Some of the rangers, 150 passengers on the early morning Metro-North train from Poughkeepsie to Manhattan were jolted from their sleep around 7:30 a.m. to a sudden jolt. The rolling stop, sounding of their compartment rolling over on a bend in the Bronx where the Hudson and Harlem rivers meet. Many of the rangers dropped off seven cars and the locomotive had fan fed off the rails, and the bed, as we sat, rolled from the rail. It was the latest in a bit of a troubled year for the nation's second-biggest commuter railroad, which had never experienced passenger death in an accident in 1.5 year-long.

Jeff Zaretsky was driving in his twisted two-door convertible around the train. He was in a hurry for an overturning rural truck.

"Then I hear the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash," he said. The Associated Press, holding his bloody right hand. "Then, the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash, the crash."

Cars from a Metro-North passenger train are scattered after the train derailed Sunday in the Bronx borough of New York. The Fire Department of New York says there are "multiple injuries" in the train derailment, and the Metro-North Commuter Railroad and the Metro-North Commuter Transportation Authority police say the train derailed near the Spuyten Duyvil station.
