Housing unit plans at Village Plaza moving ahead

By GRELLA MORENO
Leader & Times

Thursday's special city commission meeting called for a public hearing and a first and final reading of a zoning change and a site plan for a 48-unit apartment HUD and Sec. 8HUD supporting Village Plaza and Edwards Street.

Housing and community development director Karen LaFontaine then recapped the previous weeks' work with the ordinance No. 4818.

Last Tuesday, the Leader & Times Village Plaza was to adopt a plan to establish an RHED. The next commission meeting would be the last chance for the apartment plan.

Fully-funded, all-day kindergarten in five years?

By ANGIE COLEMAN
Leader & Times

Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback's announcement Dec. 30, 2013, that he plans to promote — and fund — all-day kindergarten statewide was met with a cheer in Liberal. If the governor and Brownback's plan become reality, Kansas would become the 15th state nationwide to provide full-day kindergarten at no charge. But a celebrating Liberal school district would be one of the first state leading for education dollars, demonstrable over the past four years. Between 2009 and 2013, Kansas cut its education spending by 18.3 percent — a decrease greater than all but three other states.

"It's time when states and the nation are being competitive in education, we need to be using all technologies and adapt to the completion of a

Justice delays health law's birth control mandate

By JOEL HOLLAND
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court has thrown a block into President Barack Obama's new health-care law, ruling that religious-minded companies and nonprofit organizations provide health insurance that includes birth control.

The high court late Monday night in a 5-4 vote blocked implementation of the contraceptive coverage requirement, only hours before the law's insurance mandate was to take effect for many firms.

Five justices, which come after federal court filings by Catholic-affiliated groups from around the nation in recent weeks, granted the request by lawyers for the president's signature law into temporary slumber. At least one federal appeals court signed with Democrats appointed to the bench has upheld the Affordable Care Act, also known as Obamacare.

The White House on Wednesday issued a statement saying the law's administration is confident the law is on solid footing. The administration is working with faith-centered groups to ease the burden of complying with the law's contraceptive coverage while preserving non-profit religious organizations with religious objections to contraceptive coverage from having to contract, arrange, pay or refer for such coverage.

Announcements by company firms are reminiscent of Catholic stance in Citizens' Bar Lobby Statute of the Poor Act of 1495 that the Catholic Church and religious orders had been denied earlier in the day by a federal appeals court.

The government is "temporarily enjoined from enforcing against applicants the contraceptive coverage requirements imposed by the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act and implementing regulations," the Supreme Court said.

Companies who sued in New York Sunday night to hold the final 10-second countdown and push the deadline for the mandate to Jan. 1 were Eternal Word Television Network Inc. and Michigan-based Grote Inc. Both gave government officials until 11 a.m. EST Friday to respond to the suits. A judge in Michigan had ruled in favor of Grote Inc. in a permanent or indefinite order issued late Sunday before Christmas.

"The government has lost all sense to defend constitutional rights to people," said Mark Rienzi, a lawyer for the State attorneys general claim ObamaCare changes are illegal

In this Dec. 11, 2013, file photo, Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius testifies on Capitol Hill in Washington. There's another quirk in the Obama administration's new health insurance system: it lets insurance companies continue selling policies that don't meet the law's requirements. Sebelius has ordered changes. It's a reminder that the new coverage for many uninsured Americans comes with a third party in the mix this fall. Illinois state attorneys general are slamming the Obama administration for making reported changes to ObamaCare without the consent of state government officials, which they say is illegal.

In a Thursday letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius the group specifically criticized the administration's decision to allow insurance companies to continue selling sub-standard plans for out of compliance with the Affordable Care Act for another year. The letter also criticized the HHS for the lack of both federal and state involvement in "compounded illegal executive actions."

"We support allowing citizens to keep their health insurance coverage, but the way in which the administration has carried out this — through unilateral, illegal, congressional actions," the letter states.

The attorneys general also expressed concerns about the administration's plan to ease ObamaCare enrollment exchanges, and accuse the administration of ignoring the potential vulnerability of consumer information.

"The attorneys general, we take the privacy of our states' consumers very seriously," the letter states, and accuses the Administration's decisions are "in

ObamaCare brings new taxes, fees for 2014

For those who don't buy coverage, the IRS plans to slap them with a fine

By Ben Wolfgang
The Washington Times

With the launch of coverage under the health care law on Wednesday's deadline, the government is ready to hit one — or part of the hundreds of billions of dollars the government intends to raise over the next decade to help pay for the program.

The first and most prominent is the form of fees on health insurance companies which could transfer into higher premiums for those who don't have coverage, the IRS plans to slap them with a fine — some call it a tax — for not buying it.

This is only the beginning, the conservative Heritage Foundation said in a report.

The largest revenue-raiser for long in the year is an annual fee on health insurers, meant to help fund premium subsidies and other provisions.

The fee is expected to bring in $8 billion this year and roughly $100 billion over the next decade. The Heritage Foundation said it will cost 200 Democrat lawmakers — an oxing to repeal it, warning that those votes will be used in the next campaign. The fee is some will pay Affordable Care Act subsidies.

Heritage's congressional study by economist Chris Weyrich estimated that rates will rise in 2014 by up to 2.5 percent for that reason alone. It's 2025.

the study said, rates could be rising by as much as up to 52 percent because of the fee.

The other major fee to watch out for is the tax on those who don't buy coverage. Under the law, those who do not get insurance by the end of March and do not qualify for a hardship exemption will be charged for it. The most that people will be $95, or 1 percent of household income, whichever is higher.

The penalty will increase, consid-
