Liberal needs help with stray dog problem

By CHELLE BARRIONUEVO

Animals are a huge responsibility — they have emotions, need shelter, food and care. Sometimes they get lost.

Liberal is dealing in some of those areas, because there is an excess of unneutered unknown pregnancies, strays and snatches.

Kim Angeli, the agent for Animals president Chris Mullen-Lewis said the part of the problem is owners who allow their animals to roam free and allowing pregnant or female boxes about getting a puppy for Christmas to their children.

"People think, 'Oh, what a darling Christmas present,' but children don't know what it takes to care for a dog," Lewis said. "Children can learn a lot but the parents need to be aware, so they can teach their children at Christmas, they need to think about what they're actually doing.

"Animal Control and Animals is a nonprofit organization that rescues and adopts out animals that are mistreated or unwanted or local animal shelter."

Angeli, who through the shelter, works a licensed humane society McNamara (NSLC), says overbreeding that occurs in the Liberal community is an issue, she said.

She added that Angeli for Animals is currently working on two large projects.

"The end of all this dogs that need a home, we are working on a project to move adopted from the shelter and then transferred to an NO-animals."

Angeli for Animals is also in Mullen Liberal, Denise Jones' office from stray dogs in needs and good homes or adoption.

"Lewis's office has connections with a group along the front range of Colorado's mountains to the Denver area, and they have a lot of dogs that need foster homes and they don't have the excess of stray animals that we have here. So they have generously accepted to take our rescued Liberal good homes for them."

Angeli for Animals is asked to contact the shelter if they have dogs such as, size and their records in order for them to be transferred, she said.

Mullen-Lewis noted that one way for people to help is by driving the dogs before they are placed in foster transfer that takes place every other weekend. Mullen-Lewis has a number of volunteer coordinators. Someone who is responsible and reliable.

"There is also a need for an animal control officer at the shelter.

"Angeli for Animals is asked to contact officer at the shelter, she said. Because you have eventually some of the dogs will be transferred to Mullen-Lewis.

"Volunteers are also needed to walk the dogs before they are placed in foster care for the trip to Denver, she said. Mullen-Lewis has a number of fosters about 20 at a time. We take them out and meet them at a designated place at a designated time and each animal should be assigned to a foster home. Angeli for Animals is also currently neutered before they are placed in their permanent home. We are able to do that because of the volunteers who come to the shelter to see after the dogs in homes out of this community."

The animal rescue also plans to where she explained how Angeli are working on a project to create a collaboration that does control the amount of unneutered dog pregnancies.

"Angeli for Animals is a great place, she explained. Angeli is a group from Loveland, Colo., that have a mobile unit to be used for spaying and neutering and they'll come to Liberal and spay and neuter dogs. They do the spaying and neutering at a reduced cost, and consequently, more people can afford to do that.

"We need to have more of our animals spayed and neutered. The problem is that people don't want to adoption for the three pregnant dogs or so on, but they don't have the money to do that. Angeli for Animals is the official standing to do a lot of follow up, so that's one of our partnerships."

"Angeli for Animals can take those animals that are adopted to make sure they are spayed and neutered, and we can — we try to transport the adult dogs to a place where they will not be able to reproduce and put in good homes and we can bring in this low income, low cost neuter clinic," she said.

The clinic will be in town later this month.

"We have one scheduled for Jan. 30 and Jan. 31, and the 1st and 2nd of February. We had hoped to have Cowboy Animal Rescue, but they have 50 animals in the control of those that were here," she said.

Mullen-Lewis explained that cost should not be a problem to have such animals neutered or spayed. She explained the Angeli for Animals.

"If individuals can't afford to have a dog or all, then Angeli has a good program. It's a low cost, low cost neuter spaying and we can use it for those individuals who even at a reduced cost can't afford it. Angeli for Animals can use our organization partnership in the community and keep eventually from the shelter. So we can neuter that those little puppies we see out in the streets," she said.
