By RACHEL COLEMAN • Leader & Times The “best schools” list compiled by the magazine “U.S. News & World Report” is famous for fueling competition between colleges nationwide. Harvard, Princeton and Yale routinely swap spots in the top three, and public colleges and universities vie for regional rankings.

Now Liberal High School has earned a spot in the high school category of the prestigious list. LHS ranked seventh among the state’s 369 high schools, and was among the top 10 percent nationwide, out of more than 21,000 public high schools evaluated by U.S. News. “This is a great honor,” said LHS Principal Keith Adams. “It’s always nice to be recognized for the positive things going on in our school.” The ranking, he noted, “is well deserved and representative of the amazing students and staff who have worked hard to meet academic goals.”

Superintendent of schools Lance Stout agreed. He said the honor is especially sweet given the fact that, five years ago, LHS was in danger of being listed as a failing school by federal standards.

“When we were bottoming out, we realized, ‘We’re going to have to do something different,’” he recalled. “We did a lot of research and saw that what we needed was not 100 different initiatives, but three or four pillars that would turn things around.”

Among the tools the district chose were Literacy First to emphasize the critical importance of reading mastery; the AVID (Advancement Via Individual Determination) program that intentionally positions students to move on to college; and Capturing Kids Hearts, a behavior-modification method designed to create a cooperative learning environment.

The high school also opted to increase its Advanced Placement (AP) class offerings.

“Over the past decade, there has been an increase in the number of AP courses from two to 12,” said USD 480 board member Dan Diepenbrock, who recalled forming a task force to examine the issue in 2006.

When it comes to schools, there are two main categories: public and private. Public schools are funded by the state and local governments, while private schools are funded by parents and private organizations. In Kansas, the state has a long history of supporting public education, and this commitment is reflected in the high ranking of LHS. The state's investment in education has led to a strong tradition of academic excellence, and this is evident in the success of schools like LHS. The state's commitment to education is a key factor in its success, and it is this commitment that has allowed LHS to achieve such a high ranking.
