After months of planning for a possible bond issue with local team members, USD 480 took its needs to the public with meetings designed to gather input from the community.

Before people would talk about what’s next for Liberal schools, however, they had grievances to air.

“I know there’s needs out there,” admitted retired school teacher Sam Raff at the 9:30 a.m. meeting at Hutch’s convenience store. “But the last time we voted ‘no’ to a bond issue with a big football field, and what did the school board do? Slapped us in the face and built a new football
