After debating concealed-carry plans, all other items on the agenda at Monday night's city commission meeting were approved with ease.

Guy Rice from 1101 S. Clay presented his concern during items from citizens.

He said that at his present home, there are no stop signs located at the Clay and Harold intersection.

“Right now, there are stop signs facing Harold Boulevard facing east and west. There's no stop signs going north and south on Clay,” he said.

Rice noted that drivers speed through the area right there.

“Nothing slows them down till Clay and Pine,” he said. “Seems like every weekend, it’s getting worse and worse.”

Rice then asked what the procedure was, what he needed to do to get some stop signs out there. He said that he wasn’t there for the school zones because at that time, people are required to not go over 20 mph anyway, and he added that people go more than 40 or 60 regularly.

“I’m asking for stop signs for after school and weekends,” Rice continued. “I’m concerned. I have grandkids.”

Commissioner Joe Denoyer said that there had been a similar situation a couple of years ago at 11th and Calhoun.

Vice mayor Janet Willimon then thanked Rice for coming forth to the commission and said that it’s in good hands.
