The recent Kansas Supreme Court ruling requiring the State of Kansas to spend more on education is still being deciphered by many in Topeka and in school boardrooms across the state.

State Representative Reid Petty, a former school board member himself, said that while the state won't be required to increase funding by what the plaintiffs sought, there is still a misunderstanding of just how much Kansans invest in education.

In a release by Petty, he stated that Kansas spends $12,781 per student per year, which he said was at an all-time high.

Rep. Petty: Ruling not as bad as expected
