DINOSAURS INVADING LIBERAL

'ASSASSINS' take aim

Students from the University of Kansas School of Journalism and Mass Communication are seen in a scene from the play 'Assassins' during a rehearsal. The play is set in 1963 and depicts the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. The students are dressed in period-appropriate clothing and are in a stage-like setting, with some holding props or scripts.

Workshop stresses importance of windbreaks

A group of people are gathered around a table in a workshop setting, discussing the importance of windbreaks. The workshop is part of a community outreach program aimed at educating residents about the benefits of windbreaks in reducing energy costs and improving indoor air quality. The participants are engaged in a discussion and are looking at materials on the table.

DINOSAURS INVADING LIBERAL

A large dinosaur model is standing in a field, part of a community outreach program. The model is green and yellow, and is positioned in front of a backdrop that reads 'DINOSAURS INVADING LIBERAL'. The program is aimed at educating residents about the benefits of windbreaks in reducing energy costs and improving indoor air quality.
