Planting tips, when real spring arrives

By Robert Davis

Despite the fact that many people are already off to work, the weather is still in the "in-between" zone. It's not quite warm enough to plant in the garden, and it's not quite cold enough to plant in the house. The weather is just what you need to get your garden started. It's not too hot, not too cold, and just what you need to get your garden started. It's not too hot, not too cold, and just what you need to get your garden started. It's not too hot, not too cold, and just what you need to get your garden started.
