City, county asks for exemptions from new concealed carry law

By Tom McLaughlin

BOULDER, Colo. (The Daily Camera) — The City of Boulder and Boulder County are asking the state to exempt them from a new concealed carry law that takes effect on July 1.

The law, which is part of a package of bills passed by the state legislature last month, would allow anyone who has completed a state-approved training course to carry a handgun concealed on their person.

Boulder County Board of Commissioners Chairman Dan Claitor said the county is opposed to the law because it would allow anyone to carry a handgun, even someone who is not a law-abiding citizen.

The city is also opposed to the law because it would allow anyone to carry a handgun, even someone who is not a law-abiding citizen.

BOULDER, Colo. (The Daily Camera) — The 100th anniversary of the S-State Fair is being celebrated in a variety of ways throughout the state.

The fair, which is held in Denver, is one of the largest and oldest fairs in the United States. It was first held in 1913 and has since become a major event for the state.

This year, the fair is celebrating its centennial with a variety of special events and activities. These include a parade, a fireworks display, and a variety of performances.

Doctor: Driver in Okla. train wreck had bad eyes

Reporter

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A doctor says a driver involved in a fatal train wreck in Oklahoma had bad eyesight, which may have contributed to the accident.

The driver, a 45-year-old man, was driving a pickup truck that was struck by a train. The truck was carrying a large load of lumber and was traveling at a high speed.

The doctor, who examined the driver after the accident, said that the driver had a significant vision impairment. He said that the driver's eyesight was so bad that he was unable to see the train until it was too late.
