State explains Lexis Law concerning day care regulations

By KYLE CLAYTON

LIBERAL, Mo. — The Missouri Department of Social Services has issued a new regulation concerning day care licensing, which will take effect on July 1, 2013.

The new regulation, which is part of the Lexis Law, will require day care providers to meet certain licensing requirements, including background checks, training and certification.

The regulation is intended to improve the quality of day care services and to protect the health and safety of children. The department has received many complaints from parents and the public regarding day care licensing, and the new regulation is a response to these concerns.

The regulation will require day care providers to obtain a license from the department before operating a day care facility. The license will be issued only if the provider meets all the requirements of the regulation.

The regulation will also require day care providers to undergo background checks and training. The department will also require day care providers to be certified by the Missouri Department of Education.

The regulation is a significant step in the department's efforts to improve day care licensing and to protect children. The department is committed to providing high-quality day care services to all children in Missouri.
