A Nielsen survey says Liberal is third in the nation for eatery growth potential

By KYLE CLAYTON

Liberal, Mo., is one of the nation's most promising markets for new restaurants, according to a Nielsen survey. The city ranked third in the nation for eatery growth potential, behind only Chicago and New York City.

The Nielsen survey, which is based on data from 100,000 households, found that Liberal has a high concentration of young adults, a high percentage of the population who are employed, and a high percentage of the population who are married. These factors are all key indicators of a strong market for new restaurants.

Liberal's ranking is a testament to the city's economic growth and its appeal to young professionals. The city's population has grown by 15 percent in the last five years, and the median age is 32 years old. The city's unemployment rate is 4.5 percent, which is lower than the national average of 7.4 percent.

The Nielsen survey also found that Liberal has a high percentage of households with a household income of $50,000 or more. This is a key indicator of a strong market for new restaurants, as households with higher incomes are more likely to dine out.
