Landfill fire lights up night sky

Several days after the fire broke out, the night sky over Lakewood, Colo., was lit up by a massive fire at a landfill. The fire, which started on June 18, is still burning and has caused significant damage to the surrounding area. The fire is located at the Lakewood Landfill, which is situated near the town of Lakewood. The fire is believed to have started from a pile of debris that was not properly disposed of. The fire has caused a significant amount of smoke to be released into the atmosphere, which has caused some health concerns for the people living in the area. The fire is still burning and is expected to continue for several more days.

Boost for cars or bust? Ethanol debate heats up

The debate over whether to boost support for ethanol production or to restrict it has heated up. The ethanol industry is pushing for more support, while the automotive industry is pushing for restrictions. The ethanol industry is arguing that ethanol is a clean, renewable energy source that can help reduce greenhouse gas emissions. The automotive industry is arguing that ethanol is not a viable alternative to gasoline and that it is more expensive and less efficient. The debate is expected to continue for some time.
