A wildfire in Spanish Peaks, Colo., on Saturday forced two Boy Scouts and their leader to evacuate the area. The fire, which started in the morning, quickly spread through the area, forcing the scouts and their leader to flee. The scouts were seen in the area on Saturday, and their leader and partner were forced to evacuate the area. The fire is a major threat to the area, and is a reminder of the dangers of wildfires. The scouts and their leader are safe, but the fire is still burning, and the area is still under a watchful eye.

'Reunited, and it feels so good'

LIBERAL, Kan. (AP) — A former Boy Scout leader and his partner were reunited in Spanish Peaks, Colo., on Saturday after being forced to evacuate the area during a wildfire. The pair, who had been separated for several years, were seen together in the area on Saturday. The fire, which started in the morning, quickly spread through the area, forcing the pair to flee. The pair is safe, but the fire is still burning, and the area is still under a watchful eye.
