Routine blood test saved baby's life

MCADD a silent killer for many

A 14-year-old boy, James Colton, looks like the typical 14-year-old. He has a friendly smile and a love for video games. But his parents, Colton and Morgan, know that only hours after his birth, he was a typical orange from death.

Colton was born with MCADD, a rare genetic disorder that affects the body's ability to break down certain fats. It is a silent killer for many children, often leading to sudden death or severe neurological damage.

Colton's parents, Colton and Morgan, were told by a doctor that their son had MCADD. They were given a list of symptoms to watch for, but they didn't know what to do. It wasn't until Colton was 14 years old that they realized the severity of the condition.

Colton's mother, Morgan, says that she was told by a doctor that her son had MCADD. She was given a list of symptoms to watch for, but she didn't know what to do. It wasn't until Colton was 14 years old that they realized the severity of the condition.
