Common questions about day care facilities

By KERRY HINES
Special Writer

With a deadline as tight as a drum, it's hard to get a complete picture of the day care industry in the state. But the numbers are telling. In 2012, there were 1,100 day care facilities in the state, with 1.1 million children enrolled. That's up from 1,000 facilities and 1 million children in 2011. The industry is growing, and it's expected to continue to grow in the coming years.

But with the industry's growth comes a host of questions. How do you know if a day care facility is safe? What are the requirements for day care facilities? How do you find a good day care facility? These are some of the most common questions about day care facilities.

Here are some answers to these questions:

How do you know if a day care facility is safe?

There are several things you can do to make sure a day care facility is safe. First, check the facility's license. In Ohio, all day care facilities must be licensed by the state. You can check the license status of a facility on the state's website.

Second, visit the facility. Look for signs of safety, such as fire extinguishers, first aid kits, and emergency exits. Ask the staff about their safety procedures.

Third, check the facility's reputation. Ask other parents for their experiences. Look for reviews on websites like Yelp or Angie's List.

What are the requirements for day care facilities?

In Ohio, day care facilities must meet several requirements. They must have a certain number of staff members, and they must have certain safety features. They must also have a certain number of children enrolled.

How do you find a good day care facility?

There are several ways to find a good day care facility. You can ask other parents for their recommendations. You can also look for facilities that have good reviews on websites like Yelp or Angie's List.
