Common questions about day care facilities

BY KERRY HINES
COLUMBUS, Ohio (The Columbus Dispatch) — If you're considering day care for your child, you may have some questions about the facilities. Here are some common questions and answers.

Q: How do I find a day care center?
A: You can find a day care center by asking your pediatrician for a referral, or by searching online for day care centers in your area. You can also ask friends and family for recommendations.

Q: What should I look for in a day care center?
A: You should look for a center that is licensed and has a good reputation. You should also look for a center that has a safe and secure environment, and that provides a variety of activities for your child.

Q: How do I know if a day care center is safe?
A: You can ask to see the center's license and inspect the facility. You should also ask to see the center's safety plan and fire drill records.

Q: How do I know if a day care center is good for my child?
A: You should look for a center that has a qualified staff, and that provides a variety of activities for your child. You should also look for a center that has a good reputation and a safe and secure environment.
