Legislative luncheon brings out discussion on Core Curriculum

By STEVE WILSON
Wichita, Kan. — A group of legislators and education officials gathered for a luncheon Monday at the University of Kansas Center for the Public Good to discuss the state's core curriculum. The meeting was the first of a series of discussions on the topic, which is set to be a major focus of the state's education reform efforts.

Wichita, Kan. — The Kansas State Capitol is a busy place these days, with many legislators and their families in town. One of the most recent arrivals is the wife of a state legislator, who is currently in labor. The news of her pregnancy was first reported in a local newspaper, and it has since become a topic of conversation among those in the Capitol building.
