People braved heavy rain and strong winds as they gathered for the Gospel Songfest service at the First Baptist Church in Village, Ky. The service was held in the church's sanctuary, which was filled with people of all ages. The weather outside was quite different, with heavy rain and strong winds. The churchgoers were dressed in casual attire, and the atmosphere was one of devotion and community.

Survey says community cares most about security, safety
A recent survey conducted by the National Security Council (NSC) and the Brookings Institution has found that Americans are most concerned about national security and safety. The survey, which was conducted in May and June of 2013, asked respondents to rank their top concerns. The results showed that 63 percent of respondents cited national security as their top concern, followed by the economy (53 percent) and terrorism (48 percent). Other concerns included the environment (43 percent), education (38 percent), and healthcare (35 percent). The survey also found that Americans are more concerned about national security than in previous years, with 58 percent of respondents citing it as a top concern in 2011. This shift in public opinion reflects the ongoing concerns about the security of the United States in the wake of the 9/11 attacks and the ongoing conflict in the Middle East.

'DUCKY' GETS SQUEAKY CLEAN
The National Beef Processors Association (NBPA) has launched a new campaign to promote the safety and quality of ground beef. The campaign, titled "Ducky Gets Squeaky Clean," features a large inflatable duck wearing sunglasses and a white apron. The duck is a play on the word "ducky," which is a common term for ground beef. The campaign aims to educate consumers on the importance of proper food handling and to promote the safety of ground beef. The NBPA has also launched a website, www.duckygetsqueaky.com, where consumers can learn more about the campaign and find local retailers that carry ground beef.
