Scenic study shows tourism in Sevier County has $67.6 million impact

By Tommie Smith
Sevier County has a tourism industry worth $67.6 million annually, according to a study released by the Sevier County Economic Development Authority. The study, which was conducted by the University of Tennessee, shows that tourism is a major contributor to the county's economy. The study also found that tourism has a multiplier effect on the local economy, creating jobs and supporting other businesses. The study is the first of its kind for Sevier County and provides valuable information for local officials and businesses.

WEEDS, WEEDS AND MORE WEEDS!

Working in the weeds is a tough job, but it's a necessary one. Weeds can cause a lot of damage to crops and property, so it's important to keep them under control. There are many different types of weeds, and each one requires a different approach to control. Some weeds are easy to pull, while others are more stubborn and require the use of herbicides. It's important to identify the weeds you're dealing with and choose the right control method for each one.
