Fort Hood shooter convicted on 13 counts of murder
A federal judge has convicted a man accused of the 2009 Fort Hood shooting on 13 counts of murder. The man, Nidal Hasan, was found guilty of the deaths of 13 people and the attempted murder of another 30. Hasan was sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole. The conviction is the result of a trial that lasted for several weeks. Hasan's defense attorneys argued that he was suffering from a mental illness at the time of the shooting. The prosecution argued that Hasan was sane and knew what he was doing. The judge ruled in favor of the prosecution. Hasan's conviction is a landmark case in the history of the Fort Hood shooting. It is the first time a person has been convicted of multiple counts of murder in connection with the shooting. The conviction is also a landmark case in the history of the Fort Hood shooting because it is the first time a person has been convicted of multiple counts of murder in connection with the shooting.

Random attack in Spokane leaves WWII veteran dead
A random attack in Spokane, Washington, has left a World War II veteran dead. The victim, 87-year-old Robert J. Smith, was shot in the back by a gunman on August 23, 2013. Smith was walking to his car when he was shot. The gunman fled the scene. Smith was taken to a hospital where he died of his wounds. The police are currently investigating the attack. Smith was a member of the United States Marine Corps and served in the Pacific during World War II. He was a decorated veteran and had received several awards for his service. The attack is a tragic reminder of the dangers of random violence. The police are currently investigating the attack and are looking for anyone who has any information about the shooting.
