Feds consider permit to drill on Kansas wetlands

Washington (AP) — A federal permit to drill for oil and gas on a 10,000-acre wetland in Kansas is being challenged by conservation groups. The permit would allow for the drilling of up to 10 wells. Conservation groups argue that the drilling would destroy the wetland's ecological value and harm the environment. The federal government is required to conduct a thorough environmental review before granting the permit.

Kan. agencies warn of algae threat to hunting dogs
Kansas agencies warn that blue-green algae is a threat to hunting dogs. The algae is found in some areas of the state and can be toxic if ingested. Hunting dogs are particularly at risk because they often drink water from the same sources as their owners. The agencies advise hunters to be cautious and to provide their dogs with clean water.

Justice Dept to sue North Carolina over voter law
The Justice Department is considering suing North Carolina over its new voter ID law. The law requires voters to show a government-issued photo ID at the polls. The Justice Department argues that the law is unconstitutional and discriminates against certain groups of people. The lawsuit is currently in the early stages.

PROTECT MY VOTE
A group of people is protesting against a voter ID law. They are holding signs that say "PROTECT MY VOTE". The protesters are concerned that the law will make it difficult for them to vote. They are demanding that the law be repealed.

THE SUN
If the sun were a woman, she would be the most beautiful woman in the world. She would have a warm smile and a gentle touch. She would be the source of life and the giver of light. The sun is a woman, and we should love her for it.
