Report: US combine sales plunge in September

By David L. Johnson
The U.S. combine harvester market saw a significant decline in sales in September, according to a report from the International Harvester Co. (IHC). The report indicates that sales were down 15% compared to the same month last year. This decline is attributed to a combination of factors, including a weak economy and a shift in consumer preferences towards smaller, more fuel-efficient models. IHC officials note that while the overall market is challenging, they remain optimistic about the long-term outlook for the industry.

Com harvest above expectations due to weather

By David L. Johnson
The 2013 U.S. combine harvest is well underway, and early reports suggest that yields are above expectations. This is largely due to favorable weather conditions, particularly in the Midwest and South regions. Farmers report that the crops are in good health, and the harvest is progressing smoothly. The weather has been a key factor in the success of the harvest so far, with adequate rainfall and moderate temperatures. This bodes well for a strong harvest season overall.

Dorothy announces OzFest schedule

By David L. Johnson
Dorothy, the organizer of the annual OzFest, has announced the schedule for the upcoming event. The festival, which celebrates the 100th anniversary of the iconic film 'The Wizard of Oz', will take place from October 15-18 at the local fairgrounds. The schedule includes a variety of activities, from live performances and film screenings to interactive exhibits and workshops. Dorothy is excited to welcome everyone to the festival and promises a memorable experience for all attendees.
