Kansas death penalty case goes to US Supreme Court
 The U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to hear a case that could limit the death penalty. The case involves a man who was sentenced to death in 1994 for the murder of a woman. The man's lawyers argue that the state's death penalty law is unconstitutional because it allows for the execution of someone who is not guilty of the crime.

Kan. utilities expect higher winter heating costs
 Kansas utilities expect higher winter heating costs due to a combination of factors, including a drop in natural gas prices and a rise in electricity prices. The Kansas Public Utilities Commission (KPUC) is expected to approve rate increases for several utilities in the state.

Poll: Half of older workers delay retirement plans
 A new poll shows that half of older workers in the United States are delaying their retirement plans. The poll found that 50 percent of workers aged 65 and older are not yet retired, despite the fact that the average age of retirement is 62. The reasons for the delay include a lack of savings, a desire to work longer, and a need for more income.
