Kansas officials urge motorists to watch for deer
 Kansas officials are urging motorists to watch for deer on the roads as the hunting season begins. The Kansas Department of Transportation (KDOT) reports that deer are a leading cause of traffic accidents in the state. Motorists are advised to slow down in areas with high deer populations and to look for deer in the woods and fields. If a deer is spotted on the road, motorists should stop and call the police. The KDOT also advises motorists to use caution when driving at night, as deer are more likely to be on the road during this time.
