Kansas officials urge motorists to watch for deer
 Kansas officials are urging motorists to watch for deer on the roads as the hunting season begins. The Kansas Department of Transportation (KDOT) is reminding drivers to slow down and look for deer, especially in rural areas. Deer are a leading cause of traffic fatalities in Kansas, and the number of deer-related accidents is expected to increase as the hunting season begins. KDOT is also reminding drivers to use caution when driving at night, as deer are more likely to be on the roads at night. Drivers should also be aware of the fact that deer are often found in groups, and a single deer may lead a group of other deer onto the road. Drivers should also be aware of the fact that deer are often found in areas with tall grass or brush, and they may be difficult to see. Drivers should also be aware of the fact that deer are often found in areas with a high density of trees, and they may be difficult to see.
