Mental health care suffers drought season
Cuts cause 'unnecessary suffering, raises risk of crisis'
By HOPE COHEN

As the drought continues to worsen, so does the mental health care system. In California, cuts to mental health services have led to a "drought" of care, with many people suffering from untreated mental illness. This is particularly true for those with severe mental illness, who often face long waitlists for treatment and a high risk of hospitalization or homelessness. The state's mental health system is underfunded and understaffed, and the drought has exacerbated these problems. Many people are struggling to pay for their care, and some are being discharged from hospitals without adequate follow-up care. This is a crisis that needs to be addressed immediately.

Who wants to go to Pumpkin Paradise?

With the arrival of autumn, many people are looking for a fun and festive way to spend their time. Pumpkin patches and pumpkin festivals are popular destinations for families and friends. These events offer a variety of activities, including pumpkin carving, hayrides, and games. They are a great way to enjoy the outdoors and get some exercise. Pumpkin patches also offer a variety of pumpkins for sale, from small and decorative to large and perfect for carving. Whether you are looking for a fun day out or a place to buy pumpkins, pumpkin patches are a great option.
