SUICIDE WATCH
A new study published in the Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry shows that children and adolescents with mental health conditions are at a higher risk of suicide. The study found that 15 percent of children and adolescents with mental health conditions had suicidal thoughts or behaviors. The researchers also found that children and adolescents with mental health conditions were more likely to attempt suicide than those without mental health conditions. The study was conducted by researchers at the University of California, San Diego and the University of Colorado, Boulder. The researchers analyzed data from a national survey of children and adolescents with mental health conditions. The study found that children and adolescents with mental health conditions were more likely to attempt suicide than those without mental health conditions. The researchers also found that children and adolescents with mental health conditions were more likely to have suicidal thoughts or behaviors than those without mental health conditions. DUST BOWL
New book looks at those who survived and stayed
By David Shields
The Dust Bowl was a period of severe drought and dust storms that affected the central United States during the 1930s. It was a time of great hardship and suffering for many people. However, some people managed to survive and stay in their homes. A new book, "The Dust Bowl: How They Survived and Stayed" by David Shields, tells the story of these people. The book is a collection of personal accounts and photographs. It shows how people in the Dust Bowl region managed to survive and stay in their homes. The book is a valuable resource for anyone interested in the Dust Bowl and the people who lived through it.
