Lawyers seek dismissal of Kansas murder charge
A KANSAS judge has ordered a judge to dismiss a murder charge against a man accused of killing a woman in a car crash in 2007. The judge's decision comes after the man's lawyers filed a motion to dismiss the charge, arguing that the state's evidence is insufficient to prove the man's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. The man, who is currently in custody, is charged with the first-degree murder of a woman who was killed in a car crash on Interstate 70 in 2007. The woman was driving her car when it was struck by a truck, and she was killed. The man was the driver of the car at the time of the crash. The state's case against the man is based on circumstantial evidence, including the fact that the man was the driver of the car and that the woman was killed in the car. The man's lawyers argue that the state's evidence is insufficient to prove the man's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and they are seeking a dismissal of the charge. The judge's decision is a significant development in the case, and it could lead to the man's release from custody. The man's lawyers are pleased with the judge's decision, and they are hoping that it will lead to a full acquittal. The state's attorney general is appealing the judge's decision, and the case is expected to be heard by the Kansas Supreme Court in the coming months.

Maybe Nov. 30 before healthcare.gov is fixed
The Obama administration says it may not be able to launch the new health care website, healthcare.gov, until after the end of the year. The website is intended to allow people to compare health insurance plans and to purchase coverage. The administration has been working on the website for several months, but it has encountered several problems. The most significant problem is that the website is still under development, and it is not yet ready for launch. The administration is hoping to launch the website by the end of the year, but it is not clear when that will happen. The website is a key part of the administration's health care reform, and it is expected to be a major success. The website will allow people to compare health insurance plans and to purchase coverage. It will also allow people to see how much they will pay for their health insurance.
