Who needs Bluetooth headsets? Motorola patents 'neck tattoo' smartphone accessory
By Tom Ichniowski
Motorola has filed a patent for a neck tattoo, a smartphone accessory that would allow users to interact with their devices without using their hands. The accessory, which is a small, flexible strip that can be attached to the back of a user's neck, would contain a camera and a microphone. The camera would be used to scan the user's face and identify them, while the microphone would be used to capture voice commands. The accessory would also be able to display text and images, allowing users to read messages and view photos without looking at their phones.

Company behind Obamacare site has checked past
By Tom Ichniowski
The company behind the Obamacare website has a history of legal troubles, including a lawsuit over a controversial website. The company, HealthCare.gov, was launched in 2010 as part of the Affordable Care Act. It has since become the central hub for people looking to purchase health insurance. However, the company has been plagued by legal issues, most notably a lawsuit filed by a group of individuals who claimed that the company's website was discriminatory. The lawsuit was eventually dismissed, but the company's legal history remains a topic of concern.

DC official fired after criticizing Obama change
By Tom Ichniowski
A senior official at the Department of Health and Human Services has been fired after criticizing a change in the Affordable Care Act. The official, who had been in the position for several years, was accused of making disparaging remarks about the administration's policies. The firing was seen as a warning to other officials who might be critical of the administration's actions.

CHRISTMAS PARADE
With a parade down the street, the town is ready for the holidays. The parade will feature a variety of floats, including a float for the local school and a float for the local business district. The parade will be held on the main street of the town, and will start at 10:00 AM on the day of the parade.
