Who needs Bluetooth headsets? Motorola patents 'neck tattoo' smartphone accessory

By David Lee, Staff Writer

LIBERAL, Ariz. — Motorola is looking to change the way we use our smartphones. The company has filed a patent for a "neck tattoo" — a small, flexible, adhesive accessory that can be stuck to the back of a smartphone. The patent, filed in August, describes how the "neck tattoo" can be used to control the phone's camera, flashlight, and other functions. The accessory is made of a thin, flexible material and can be stuck to the back of the phone. It has a small, rectangular screen and a few buttons. The patent also describes how the accessory can be used to control the phone's camera, flashlight, and other functions.
