Asian nations dominate international test

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — Asian nations dominated an international test of mathematics and science skills, with South Korea and Singapore leading the way. The results of the 2012 Programme for International Student Assessment (PISA) were announced Tuesday by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD).

South Korea topped the list with an average score of 551, followed by Singapore at 549. The United States ranked 22nd with a score of 489. The lowest performing nation was Mexico at 312.

The test, which is administered every two years, assesses the ability of 15-year-olds in reading, mathematics and science. It is the largest and most rigorous of international tests.

The OECD said that the results show that Asian countries have made significant gains in the past few years, while the United States has made little progress. The organization said that the United States needs to improve its education system to keep up with the rest of the world.

The OECD said that the results show that the United States is not doing well in mathematics and science, which are key areas for the future. The organization said that the United States needs to focus on these areas to improve its competitiveness in the global economy.
