County looks to spend $100K to stop concealed carry in 2 buildings

Commission may request 4-year exemption from concealed carry law before spending on security

Seward County

Lawrence, Kan. (AP) — Seward County commissioners are looking to spend $100,000 to stop concealed carry in two buildings in Lawrence, Kan. The commission will vote on the measure on Monday. The measure would request a four-year exemption from the state's concealed carry law. The exemption would allow the county to spend the money on security measures in the two buildings. The buildings are the county's main office and the county's law enforcement training center. The exemption would expire in 2017. The commission will also vote on whether to spend the money on security measures in the two buildings. The measure would request a four-year exemption from the state's concealed carry law.
