Iceland's hidden elves delay road projects

Reykjavik, Iceland (AP) — A small town in Iceland is famous for its hidden elves, and it's causing a headache for road builders. The town of Grindavik is home to a population of about 1,000 people, but it's also home to a large number of hidden elves. These elves are said to be the spirits of the dead, and they are believed to be very powerful. They are said to be able to cause trouble for anyone who crosses their path. This has led to a number of road projects being delayed or canceled in the town. Local officials are trying to find a way to deal with the elves, but they are having a hard time. Some people believe that the elves are real, while others think they are just a local legend. Whatever the case, the elves are causing a lot of trouble for the town and its road builders.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

Apollo 8 astronaut marks 1968 broadcast to earth

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the world celebrates the 45th anniversary of the Apollo 8 mission, one of the mission's crew members is marking the occasion in a different way. Fred M. Smith, the mission's first African American, is marking the occasion by reading the Christmas story to the crew. Smith was the first African American to travel in space. He was on the Apollo 8 mission in December 1968. The mission was the first manned mission to orbit the moon. Smith's reading of the Christmas story was a historic moment. It was the first time that an African American had read the Christmas story in space. Smith's reading was also a moment of unity. It was a moment when people from different backgrounds came together to celebrate the holiday. Smith's reading was a reminder that the Christmas story is a story of hope and redemption for everyone.
