Iceland's hidden elves delay road projects

APOLLO 8 marked the first time that humans traveled beyond Earth's atmosphere. The mission, which launched on Dec. 16, 1968, was a landmark event in space exploration. The crew of three astronauts, including the first woman in space, Valentina Tereshkova, spent 28 days in space, orbiting the Earth 10 times. The mission was a success, and it paved the way for future space exploration.

Iceland's hidden elves delay road projects
Iceland's hidden elves, known as the "Huldufólk" (hidden people), are believed to live in the crevices and caves of the country. These mythical creatures are said to be the remnants of a pre-Christian belief system. In recent years, the discovery of these hidden people has led to the cancellation of several road projects in the area. The government has decided to respect the wishes of the hidden people and has agreed to reroute the roads. This decision has caused controversy, as it is seen as a barrier to economic development in the region.
