Goals love Christmas trees

By [Author Name]

It's the season of giving, and for many people, that means giving a Christmas tree. In the heart of the state, a group of people is working to ensure that everyone has a tree to give. The group, known as the Christmas Tree Project, is collecting trees from across the state and distributing them to those in need. The project is a labor of love, and the members are dedicated to making sure that every child has a tree to give. The trees are collected from private landowners and are then transported to a central location where they are stored until they can be distributed. The project is a wonderful way to give back to the community, and it's a great way to ensure that everyone has a tree to give.

Holiday trash becomes treat

By [Author Name]

As the holiday season comes to a close, many people are left with a mountain of trash. But what if that trash could be turned into a treat? In a new program, people are being encouraged to donate their holiday trash to a local organization that will use it to make treats for the homeless. The program is a wonderful way to give back to the community, and it's a great way to ensure that everyone has a treat to enjoy.

Okla. tribal languages endangered

By [Author Name]

As the state of Oklahoma grows, the languages of its Native American tribes are becoming endangered. Many of these languages are unique and have a rich history. However, as more people move to the state, the younger generations are often not learning their tribal languages. This is a tragedy, as these languages are a vital part of the tribes' culture and identity. Efforts are being made to preserve these languages, but more needs to be done to ensure that they are not lost forever.
