Oklahoma City resident celebrates 113th birthday

She's 113 and still as spry as a daisy. In fact, she's so spry that she's still working as a volunteer at the Oklahoma City Public Library. She's the only person in the city who has lived in Oklahoma City for her entire life.

She's also the only person in the city who has lived in Oklahoma City for her entire life.

Home electricity use in US falling to 2001 levels

Home electricity use in the United States has fallen to levels not seen since 2001, according to a report from the U.S. Energy Information Administration (EIA) released today.

The report shows that residential electricity consumption in the United States fell by 1.5 percent in 2012, marking the second consecutive year of decline.

BETTER GADGETS

The report also notes that the decline in electricity use is largely due to energy efficiency improvements in homes, such as the widespread use of energy-efficient light bulbs and appliances.

ON THE OTHER HAND,

While electricity use in homes is down, the report also notes that electricity use in commercial buildings and industry has increased.
