Justice delays health law's birth control mandate

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court has twice delayed the implementation of the Affordable Care Act's birth control mandate, a move that has frustrated advocates and opponents alike. The court's decision to grant a stay on the mandate's implementation until after the presidential inauguration in January 2014 has been seen as a victory for those who oppose the law. The mandate requires employers to provide health insurance that covers a range of contraceptive services, including birth control pills, patches, and intrauterine devices.
