• Leader & Times

Many people bike across America to bring awareness to a cause or causes such as cancer or heart disease or other diseases.

Robert 'Bear' Bassett, a former high school teacher from Bend, Ore., is biking across the U.S. to bring awareness to a cause that affects young people — community involvement.

Bassett is currently embarking on a nearly 7,700-mile long journey that began in Bend, Ore., on June 1 to promote student volunteerism and community leadership. This will be his third such ride overall after completing rides

Maine woman finds two-headed baby snapping turtle

She named it Frank and Stein

BELFAST, Maine (AP) — A woman in Maine has come across a two-headed baby snapping turtle that was trying to cross the road.

Officer Tabot of Hudson tells WLBZ-TV she found the tiny creature this week while she was watching turtle hatchlings to make sure they arrived safely at the other side of the road.

She noticed one of the turtles had been left behind. It was so shiny she thought at first that it had been dyed its head.

She picked it up and realized it had two heads. That's why she realized it had two heads. The turtle the vault into the palm of Tour hand.

She named it Frank and Stein.

2014-15 college concert series starts

• Seward County Community College/Area Technical School

Music filtered through the rare saturated tracks of trading material Wednesday at the Seward County Community College/Area Technical School library hosted its first 'Library and Lunch' event for the 2014-15 year. Local musicians Lydia Ingram and Max Henderson performed an informal concert for a group of about 30 students, employees and community members.

Ingram, on bassoon, and Henderson, on saxophone, performed a variety of pieces ranging from the 80th-pioneer 'Electric Rag' by Scott Joplin, and the '70s Missouri' by Haydn.

The free performances come with refreshments provided by Seward Street Coffee, courtesy of the college.

Library director Mark Pawelek says the library hosts a variety of free events throughout the year, each semester, and will announce upcoming dates and performers as details are finalized.
