Survey says: 'Scale back'
Vision Team tightens scope, price tag of bond issue
By David Cooper

It says the private, non-union bond issue for the $1.2-billion expansion of the Huggston plant in Huggston, S.D., is too large and too risky, according to a survey of 100 local business leaders. The survey, conducted by the Vision Team, a group of local business leaders, says the bond issue should be scaled back to $500 million and the project should be completed in two phases. The survey also says the project should be completed in two phases. The survey also says the project should be completed in two phases.

The Benghazi Transcripts: Top Defense officials briefed Obama on 'attack,' not video or protest
A transcript of a meeting between top defense officials and President Obama on the night of the Benghazi attack is set to be released. The transcript shows that the officials briefed Obama on the attack as a "terrorist attack" rather than a "demonstration" or "protest." The transcript also shows that the officials discussed the possibility of a "demonstration" or "protest" but ultimately concluded that the attack was a "terrorist attack." The transcript is expected to be released in the coming weeks.
