National Beef to shut California plant, cites tight cattle supply

Additional processing could be seen locally

National Beef

National Beef Holdings Co. says its plant in California will be shut because of a tight cattle supply. The company says it will move production to other plants in the U.S. and Canada. The plant in California has been operating since 1982. The company says it will continue to process cattle from the California area, but it will not be processed at the California plant. ## Obama running out of reasons to reject Keystone XL

Obama is running out of reasons to reject the Keystone XL pipeline. The administration has cited various reasons, including environmental concerns and the need for more studies. However, critics argue that the pipeline is a vital part of the U.S. energy infrastructure and that the administration is using environmental concerns as a pretext to delay or block the project. The pipeline would transport oil from the Bakken and Permian basins in the U.S. to the Gulf Coast, where it can be exported to Europe and Asia.
