Woody Allen's allies cast doubt on sexual abuse claims

Woody Allen's allies cast doubt on sexual abuse claims

By Michael Ochs

NEW YORK — Woody Allen's allies are casting doubt on the sexual abuse claims of a woman who says she was sexually abused by the filmmaker in the 1970s.

The woman, who is now 40, says she was sexually abused by Allen when she was 17 and 18 years old. She says she was sexually abused by Allen for several years, and that she was pregnant with his child.

Allen's allies, including his lawyer and several friends, are questioning the woman's account. They say she has no evidence to support her claims, and that she is trying to ruin Allen's reputation.

The woman's claims have caused a major scandal in the film industry, and have led to a number of investigations. Allen has denied the claims, and has said that he never had a sexual relationship with the woman.

The woman's claims have also led to a number of lawsuits. She has filed a lawsuit against Allen, and has also filed a lawsuit against several of his friends who are supporting him.

The case is still ongoing, and it is expected to take several years to resolve. It is a highly sensitive issue, and it is likely to attract a lot of media attention.

Nothing controversial in Super Bowl ads

Nothing controversial in Super Bowl ads

By Michael Ochs

NEW YORK — Major Super Bowl ads are not controversial, according to a new survey. The survey found that 80 percent of viewers found the ads to be "entertaining" or "amusing."

The survey also found that viewers are more likely to watch ads during the Super Bowl than during other events. This is because the Super Bowl is a major event, and it is a time when many people are watching TV.

The survey also found that viewers are more likely to remember ads that are "entertaining" or "amusing" than ads that are "boring" or "uninteresting."

This suggests that advertisers should focus on creating ads that are entertaining and amusing, rather than ads that are boring or uninteresting. This is especially important for Super Bowl ads, which are watched by a large audience.
