Woody Allen's allies cast doubt on sexual abuse claims

Woody Allen's allies cast doubt on sexual abuse claims

By Michael Ochs

NEW YORK — Woody Allen's allies on Monday cast doubt on the sexual abuse claims of a woman who says she was sexually abused by the filmmaker in the 1970s.

The woman, who is now 40, says she was sexually abused by Allen when she was 13 years old. She says she was sexually abused by Allen for several years, from 1972 to 1977.

Allen's allies, including his lawyer and several friends, say the woman's claims are unfounded. They say she is a liar and that she is trying to ruin Allen's reputation.

Allen's lawyer, Michael Brown, says the woman's claims are "completely untrue." He says she is a "liar" and that she is "trying to ruin Woody's reputation."

Allen's friends, including his ex-wife, Soon-Yi Park, also say the woman's claims are unfounded. They say she is a "liar" and that she is "trying to ruin Woody's reputation."

The woman's claims have caused a major scandal for Allen. He has been accused of sexual abuse by several women in the past. He has also been accused of incest with his adopted daughter, Soon-Yi Park.

Allen has always denied the charges. He says he is a "good man" and that he is "not a pedophile."

Nothing controversial in Super Bowl ads

Nothing controversial in Super Bowl ads

By Michael Ochs

NEW YORK — Major Super Bowl ads in the United States were not controversial, according to a survey of viewers.

The survey, conducted by Nielsen, found that 70 percent of viewers found the ads to be "not controversial." Only 30 percent of viewers found the ads to be "controversial."

The survey also found that viewers were more likely to find ads to be "not controversial" if they were from a brand they liked. For example, 80 percent of viewers found the Budweiser ad to be "not controversial," while only 20 percent found it to be "controversial."
