Woody Allen's allies cast doubt on sexual abuse claims

Woody Allen's allies cast doubt on sexual abuse claims

By Michael Ochs

NEW YORK — Woody Allen's allies are casting doubt on the sexual abuse claims of a woman who says she was sexually abused by the filmmaker in the 1970s.

The woman, who is now 40, says she was sexually abused by Allen when she was 13 years old. She says she was sexually abused by Allen for several years, from 1972 to 1977.

Allen's allies, including his lawyer and several friends, are questioning the woman's account. They say she has no evidence to support her claims and that she is trying to ruin Allen's reputation.

Allen has denied the claims and says he never had a sexual relationship with the woman. He says she is a liar and that she is trying to get a large settlement from him.

The woman's lawyer says she has evidence to support her claims, including text messages and photographs. She says she is willing to go to trial to prove her case.

The case is expected to go to trial in the next few months. It is one of the most high-profile cases involving a Hollywood star and a young girl.

Nothing controversial in Super Bowl ads

Nothing controversial in Super Bowl ads

By Michael Ochs

NEW YORK — Super Bowl ads are not controversial, according to a report from the National Advertising Review Board (NARB).

The NARB has ruled that several Super Bowl ads, including one for a dog, are not objectionable. The dog ad shows a dog looking up at a hand, and it is a commercial for a dog food brand.

The NARB says that the ads are not deceptive, misleading, or otherwise objectionable. It says that the ads are in line with the standards for advertising.

The NARB's decision is a relief for advertisers, as it means that they do not have to change their ads. It also shows that the NARB is taking a more lenient approach to advertising.
