Bottle released by Mass. scientist in April 1956 found

The bottle was found by a scientist in Massachusetts in April 1956. It was a clear glass bottle with a white label that read "SODIUM FLUORIDE". The bottle was found in a field near a road. The scientist who found it was a geologist who was studying the geology of the area. He found the bottle while he was walking through the field. He was looking for rocks and minerals. He found the bottle and he was very surprised. He had never seen a bottle like that before. He took the bottle home and he looked at it. He saw the label and he was very interested. He thought that the bottle was very old. He decided to keep the bottle. He kept it in his collection of rocks and minerals. He never told anyone about the bottle. He kept it secret. He was a scientist and he knew that he should keep his work secret. He was a geologist and he was studying the geology of the area. He was looking for rocks and minerals.
