Election shows the Supremes must step up the game
The Supreme Court is set to hear arguments on the constitutionality of the Voting Rights Act on Tuesday. The act, which was passed in 1965, is a landmark civil rights law that prohibits racial discrimination in voting. It has been a cornerstone of the federal government's efforts to protect the right to vote for all Americans. The Supreme Court's decision could have a significant impact on the act's future.

Activists push to split California into 6 states
A group of activists is pushing for California to be split into six states. The activists believe that California is too large and diverse to be a single state and that splitting it into six states would be a better solution. The activists are working to build a coalition of people who support their plan and are holding public hearings and rallies. The plan is to split California into six states: Northern California, Central California, Southern California, Eastern California, Western California, and the Central Valley. The activists believe that this plan would allow each state to better address the needs of its residents and would lead to a more balanced and equitable distribution of resources.
