NATIONAL SEXUAL ASSAULT AWARENESS AND PREVENTION MONTH

Sexual assault a growing epidemic

By ELLY GRIPPE
• Leader & Times

According to the Centers for Disease Control in the United States, one in five women and one in 71 men have been raped in their lifetime, and an estimated 1.3 million women are raped or sexually assaulted each day in the United States.

The Kansas Coalition Against Sexual and Domestic Violence says that approximately 300,000 women and 40,000 men will be raped in their lifetime and many more Kansans will be sexually assaulted in their lifetime.

April is known as Sexual Assault Awareness Month and the Liberal Area Rape Crisis and Domestic Violence Center (LARCDVC) continues to work to this end, offering several different services including individual advocacy, group support, public policy advocacy and community education.

Lori Hensley, executive director of LARCDVC, said sexual assault is becoming a growing epidemic.

"Many people think that because we live in rural Kansas, sexual assault doesn't happen here," she said. "If you would look at statistics there's probably as much or more sexual assault per capita in a rural community than there is in a big city. Sexual assault rates and the one thing that people need to understand is very few people that are violated by sexual assault are violated by a stranger."

Hensley said the Kansas Coalition Against Sexual and Domestic Violence says that approximately 70.7 percent of Kansas rape offenders were known by their victims. However, Hensley says that there is a lot of misinformation out there about sexual assault.

"We do know from different statistics that come through law enforcement, criminal justice and the

State aid increase lowers property tax request for bond

• L&T staff report

With only four days to go before the bond election, Unified School District 480 officials are hoping that a week, a change in the state formula for bond matching rates and today will lower the request from property taxes should the bond be accepted.

Superintendent of Schools Dr. Kent Runnebaum of Education, 480, No. 480 will receive 54 percent support from the state rather than 49 percent. That means the property tax request to fund 29 percent of the project designed by 24 percent.

Using a basis of $100,000 as a guide, the original request for the bond would have been $4.60 per month, a 19 percent increase in the amount needed to fund the bond proposal.

The new numbers were well received at central Education.

"It will cost even less than I even thought," superintendent Paul Lathrom said. "I realize we're pressed and fortunate at where we are at with our financing. It will be a nice layer of a burden to the property owners."

The district has been discussing the bond with the Liberal Area Alliance for Responsible Growth, and sharing that 71 percent of the project would be funded by the state rather than with 27 percent from the property owners.

Kan. Senate passes expanded school funding plan

Senate says 'no' to funding Common Core

By JOHN BLEAK
• Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Senate approved a Republican educational funding plan early Friday after expanding it to include a measure blocking public schools from using multistate reading and math standards.

The vote was 23-17 and sent the measure to the House, only hours after its chief author, Senate President Susan Wagle of Wichita, was swept aside by a more moderate alternative plan. The full House planned to debate the measure later Friday.

Before the Senate's debate began, Minority Leader Terry Bruce, of Hutchinson, said Democrats would vote for the proposal even if they thought it was flawed, to keep the Legislature's work alive. Bruce said Democrats have been frustrated by some GOP senators' tactics with the party's leaders and joined with them to defeat Wagle's plan on a 20-20 tie.

Conservative Republicans have attacked the multistate Common Core reading and mathematics standards that the State Board of Education adopted three in 2010. The measure GOP leaders added to the Senate plan Friday would block districts from using the standards through June 2016.

Opponents say the Common Core standards are akin to federal standards, which they say would take state standards out of local control.

Supporters say the standards will help students be more college and career ready and would be costly to put into effect.

"We are in control of the purse, and with that comes responsibility and accountability," said Sen. Dennis Pyle, a conservative Hiawatha Republican.

But the standards were an initiative of governors and education commissioners associations, and supporters say they'll help students be more competitive.

"The Common Core standards have the potential to be the best possible standards for our students in our country," said Dave Fennell, a lobbyist for the Kansas National Education Association, the state's largest teachers' union.

Conservatives also attacked the bill to block the standards because it would require that teachers who've been on the job for more than three years demonstrate that they're effective teachers in order to make it difficult to remove teachers who are underperforming and ineffective in the classroom.

The Senate Republicans' plan is designed to satisfy a Kansas Supreme Court decision directing lawmakers to boost aid to poor districts by July 1. Democratic Gov. Sam Brownback might change and vote on the bill late Thursday night.

The $129 measure increase aid to poor districts by $129 million annually to income and, income taxes cuts as well. The plan would be paid for by financing state aid to all districts by sales, classes and transportation.

The bill also lets changes to aid to school districts to other education policies that Republicans support, including a proposal to give families sending their children to private schools a tax break of up to $1,000 a year.

Associated Press writers Scott Anthony Hensley at Topeka Democrat, argued that Water rates in Salina aimed at keeping precious commodity

by GORDON G WEBER
• Salina Journal

SALINA (AP) — Salina's water rates changed to help decrease consumption of a precious commodity.

City water customers who are unsure if Salina is serious about conserving water will get a reality check in their pockets with the garden hose has seemed to clean up in drastic.

Salina abandoned the declining rate structure, which rewarded high use with lower cost, in favor of charging more for excess consumption.

"It used to be, the more you used the less it cost you," said Martha Sue Hall, who has lived here since 1948 but changed that. Now we have a water conservation rate, which should give if a much fresher look.

The level of usage above which the conservation rate kicks in, one 225 percent more than that depends on a household's base consumption.

Hall's how it works.

The base rate for households winter quarter consumption rate. For amount of water used in excess of 3,000 gallons, but not exceed 6,000 gallons, but not 6,000 gallons.

Households that use more than 6,000 gallons a month would be billed at the excess rate.

The customer then is allowed to each month before forcing the conservation threshold. The applies only to users who consume more than 6,000 gallons a month. Any users all customers 6,000 gallons or those who use any less than 3,000 gallons a month, except for limit until they go over 6,000 gallons, not 3,000 gallons.

Under the old rate structure, the average 10,000 gallons a month during the three-month winter quarter would be able to use 12,000 gallons a month without paying the higher rate.

Any water you use over that you pay an excess use rate for "false" said

For that first 12,000 gallons the would pay $1.90 per 1,000 gallons. That comes to $19.00 a month, plus water fees and taxes of $10.40, for a total of $29.40. however, water fee may be $8.40. So if the user instead consumes 15,000 gallons, that rates 3,000 gallons at $2.40 to the bill, or $34.80.

The change attempts to encourage customers to be water aware.

"It doesn't make sense if the water is cheap that you think you're not going to be very careful with how much you use," she said.

The city also has a water audit program where staff visits the home, groundwater and views the leaks.
